Dear Sir/Madam,

My name is Mahmoud and I would like to apply for the position of Working Student Java Developer (f/m/d) in a company contributing to a safer world in your company.

Instead of attaching a traditional cover letter, I thought it would be best to explain here why I am applying for the position and why I think I would be a good fit for your company.

I came across your company a few months ago when I started a new career adventure with a Java Developer training course at the Digital Career Institute in Berlin. I was immediately drawn to your new company as I found so many positive reviews online from your current and former employees. I particularly like the concept of your workspace and the wide range of talents and age groups that have contributed to the growth of your company. That is very impressive.

Fast forward to today, where I saw a job opening for Working Student Java Developer (f/m/d) in a company contributing to a safer world on the internet. I am sure when you open my resume (attached), your first thought will probably be: "Why is he applying for this position?". The truth is that I have been interested in technology since I was a child and I always wanted to develop myself. I adapt easily to new challenges and that is why I decided to finally pursue my lifelong dream and become a programmer.

Having worked in the IT field for many years, I would describe myself as a good communicator and team player.

In your company profile, I see how you encourage your employees to collaborate on new and fresh ideas while encouraging "diversity" of ideas. I like that.

I particularly like your team building exercises and the openness of your office space. The different cultures and languages spoken in your organization are also a reason why I think I could fit in well.

You might be wondering "what are you actually doing now?" I finished an intensive Java training course at DCI (Digital Career Institute) in Berlin, which also included some German classes. Yes, my spoken German is finally becoming understandable! It was an extremely rewarding experience and has only strengthened my desire to start a new career.

Please find attached my CV. I would be happy to have a conversation with you to discuss the role further. You can reach me via email or mobile.

Best regards,

Mahmoud Najmeh
